Welcome

To you

Our visitor, and our friend,

The time has come for you to leave us and it is never easy to say "goodbye." We hope that you leave with a head full of memories and your soul enriched by our country, our people, and the experiences you have had here.

We hope that you have been uplifted by the unique and wonderful things we have to offer; from our breathtaking wide open landscapes, to the open arms of warm greetings, to the exclusive shop-lined streets to game parks, where the bark of the hyena is the only sound that breaks the silence.

In the spirit of our country's warmth, flavours and inimitable moments, we'd like to say farewell with a small taster of Amarula, a favourite South African liqueur. Amarula has a heritage woven into African wildlife, as the marula fruit has long been a favourite of elephants and is believed to make them drunk as they indulge in the sweet taste! Marula is also revered as the food of kings amongst many sub-Saharan peoples and many communities make a marula brew to present as an offering to the spirits of the ancestors or to honour their leaders.

And now it is your turn to raise a glass and bid us farewell.
Until next time, Hamba Kahle.*
